Church and Canadian Culture

Editors
VanderVennen, Robert E.

Affiliation
Institute for Christian Studies

Issue Date
1991

Keywords
Christianity and culture
Christian sects

Metadata
Show full item record

Citation

Publisher
University Press of America

URI
http://hdl.handle.net/10756/348495

Type
Book

Language
en

Description

ISBN
0819184209
0819184217

Rights holder
University Press of America, 4501 Forbes Blvd., Suite 200, Lanham, MD 20706 U.S.A. [orders@rowman.com or ICS orders: klynch@icscanada.edu]

Collections
Special Collections - Alumni, Associates and Friends
Faith and Learning Network Bibliography
Culture of Canada: Religion. In Canada, as with many developed countries, religious affiliation is much more prevalent than religious observance, although official statistics vary by ethnic and religious group. The majority of Canadians claim some type of religious affiliation, most often Christianity, although the number of people claiming no religious affiliation has steadily risen since the 1980s. According to the latest available census data, 67 percent of the Canadian population self-identifies as Christian—38 percent Roman Catholic and 29 percent Protestant. The most prevalent Protestant denominations in the country, listed in order, are United Church of Canada, Anglican Church of Canada, Baptist, Lutheran and Presbyterian.