Taking a closer look at Tanzanian prose in the early 90s, it can be said that it has preserved the main structural features which had taken shape within the previous two decades of its development. One of these features is a more or less rich system of genres (short story, novelette, novel). Another is a traditional division into `popular` and `elite` literature. This division had already been noted by many researchers in the 70s and the 80s, although they used different terms for it; e.g., popular and serious literature (Bertoncini 1989), popular and standard literature (Ohly 1990), riwaya-pendwa and riwaya-dhati (Mlacha and Madumulla 1991), and others.
However, I personally believe early '90s babies (1990-1992) can be considered partial '90s kids since most tend to remember the second half of the '90s (1995-1999) best compared to the first half (1990-1994). In addition to that, their childhood didn't come to an end until the early/mid '00s.

Subject: Re: Are people born in the early '90s considered '90s kids?
Written by: nicole1977 on 01/01/11 at 2:31 am.

I don't mean to speak on behalf of all those who were born in the early '90s, but don't you think that if someone were born during that era, then they would have memories that go back as far as the mid '90s?

Subject: Re: Are people born in the early '90s considered '90s kids?
Written by: nicole1977 on 01/29/11 at 4:06 pm.